Greenbrier Sporting Club honored

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS — The Greenbrier Sporting Club — a billion-dollar gated community — has been selected as a 2005-2006 Premier Property by the editors of Links Magazine.

The Greenbrier Sporting Club is one of only 140 properties in North America awarded this honor, according to marketing director Patti Spaniek.

"To be selected, a community was required to have golf as the centerpiece of its amenities and a dedication to overall service," she said.

The Greenbrier Sporting Club is a year-round residential community with 500 homesites located on 6,500 acres of property owned by The Greenbrier. Homes range from $400,000 to $2.2 million.

The Snead golf course, named for longtime Greenbrier golf pro and legend Sam Snead, was designed by Tom Fazio. The centerpiece of the Sporting Club boasts a par 71, 7,025-yard golf course.

Links Magazine showcases information which helps potential buyers identify communities to live in. The number of golf course real estate communities has sharply risen in the United States in the past five years.
