

Established in 2002 by partners Donald M. Rattner and Andrew Friedman, Studio for Civil Architecture is distinguished by its reputation for excellence in classical and traditional design; quality of service; and ability to realize the vision of its clients.

Our core practice focuses on high quality residential work with specialized expertise in the planning and design of resort and sporting communities. For both private and developer clients, we have designed single-family homes and clubhouses, planned neighborhoods, renovated historic apartments, homes and estates, produced architectural pattern books and design guidelines, and sat on Architectural Review Boards.

Our design philosophy is embodied in three fundamental principles. First, we seek to be innovative, in that we approach the art of traditional building as a rigorous discipline subject to continuous re-interpretation and imaginative application. Second, we strive to be contextual, meaning that our work looks to accord with the character and history of its physical surroundings, thereby rooting the building in their place and time. And third, we aim to be modern, insofar as our projects incorporate current building technologies, serve the needs of contemporary clientele, and embrace the art of living today.

We welcome the opportunity to speak with you about your project.
